

What would Ronald Reagan say?

“The government is not the solution to our problems, the government is the problem.” ...
Ronald Reagan

- Home
- Page 2
- Economy
- Politics
- Privacy
- Google

How many times did Obama blame Bush for the current situation?

May 21, 2009 | By admin In Politics |

-->

Obama has used the word “inherited” and “previous administration” a lot, especially when talking about the problems the country is facing. He did so again today in his speech about terrorism (the apology to the terrorists). As time goes on this excuse won’t carry as much weight.

He’s being defensive because he’s not done much besides reinstate government funded abortion and embryonic stem cell research. Blaming the last president or just talking like you are still on the campaign trail isn’t enough.

Oh, and have you noticed that when it comes to the international items, he’s just continuing the Bush doctrine? He’s continuing the military campaign in Afghanistan as well as restarting the military tribunals and he “reserves the right” to the enhanced interrogation techniques (while bashing Bush for using then in what he calls “torture”). He’s also going back on his promise to pull the troops out immediately.

Well, with all this bashing of others, I ran across an old clip of Ronald Reagan, when he was asked if any of the economic blame was his. I love Reagan for his quick witted responses, and here’s one of them. You’d never hear this kind of humor from any democrat:

Have I mentioned that I miss Reagan lately?

Share and Enjoy:

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

Other Related Posts: