As the novel coronavirus continues to spread, a new kind of cancel culture is taking hold in the entertainment industry.

In recent weeks, movie releases, film festivals, concerts and other events involving public crowds and international travel have taken a hit from the spread of the COVID-19 respiratory illness.

The venerable South by Southwest multimedia conference in Austin, Texas, has been canceled. And next month's Coachella and Stagecoach festivals have been rescheduled until the fall.

Even Disneyland, which has closed on only three previous occasions in history — the Northridge quake, 9/11 and the day of mourning after the JFK assassination — announced March 12 that it would be shutting down through the end of the month, starting March 14.

From the next James Bond film and St. Patrick's Day parades to the Louvre museum and BTS concerts, here's a rundown of what's been affected by the coronavirus around the world.

This list — which includes events, movies, music, theater, books, opera, theme parks, museums and dance — is being updated regularly as more events are affected.
