Joe Biden told a Milwaukee television station Monday that voters will know who he would appoint to the Supreme Court “if I’m elected” — not, apparently, before they vote.

After acknowledging he has a list of potential nominees, Joe Biden told TMJ 4 he simply is not going to share it.

NEW: Biden to @tmj4 on SCOTUS: "We're in the middle of an election. By the time that vote comes up, if it comes up, there will have been close to 40% of people who have already voted. It's a violation of the spirit of the Constitution to suggest that it should not wait..."

Biden also said his 1st choice is to select an African-American woman, but outlined his reasoning for not releasing a list of nominees

Pressed on if the American people should know who he'll appoint: "No they don't, but they will if I'm elected. They'll have plenty of time."

He admitted the first selection was based on race and gender: a black woman. But beyond that, he would not provide additional details.

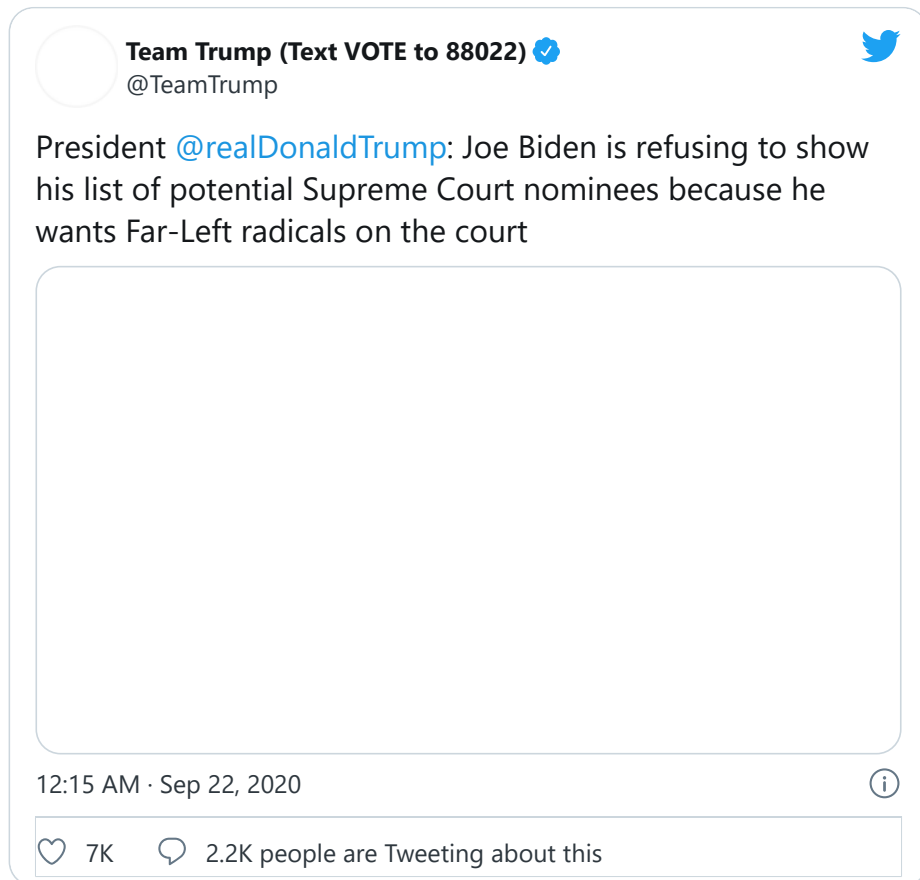

“Should voters know?” the reporter asked. “Should voters know who you’re going to appoint?”

“No, they don’t, but they will if I’m elected. They’ll have plenty of time,” Biden answered.

He claimed he would not share the names, in part, because doing so would give critics too much time to scrutinize them.

During a rally in Swanton, Ohio, on Monday, Trump said why he thinks Biden is not releasing a list:

“They don’t want to show the judges because the only ones he can put in are far-left radicals,” Trump said, adding that a nominee “left-of-center” would not be enough for progressives.

“So he’s going to have to put in radicals,” Trump argued, “so he doesn’t want to show who his judges are.”

Trump added that if Biden divulged his picks, he would be “unelectable.”

Editor’s Note: At the time of publication, this article’s headline and first sentence mischaracterized Joe Biden’s statement, summarizing this statement as “voters do not deserve to know” who he would appoint to the Supreme Court. They have been corrected to more accurate language.

Hey Joe, you're a lying dog-face pony soldier.

Joe: "I want a second opinion."

OK: You are a dementia-riddled, quid-pro-joe, corrupt deep-stater.

Joe: "touche!"
